FIRST DOWN . . . WITH ROOM TO SPARE

A new season ...A new game

By ART DALEY
Green Bay Press-Gazette

This is the Packers' 55th season in professional football . . . and it's got to be the greatest puzzler of all time.

Any Green Bay season is a mystery but this is especially so because of (1) the new playing rules and (2) the fierce competition at the key problem spot in 1973 — quarterback.

About the only sure things for '74 are that it's a new season and a new game.

The National Football League installed some real shocking and interesting rules changes last spring . . . and probably the most noticeable will be the shift of the goal posts from the goal line to the end line.

It's been 42 years since the NFL last played a game with the posts on the end line. . . . The shift was made then to encourage more scoring via field goals. The 1974 switch is meant to discourage constant field goaling and open up the entire end zone more for passing.

The season of 1933, when the posts went up 10 yards, also saw a drastic change in the passing game. Passing was permitted anywhere from behind the line of scrimmage. Previously, passing was only allowed in an area five yards behind the line.

Once the goal posts were moved, it was possible to change the kickoff from the 40 to the 35-yard line, thus permitting long returns that won't immediately be turned into field goals.

Also, with the field goal kicking, the ball will come back to the 20 or the line of scrimmage, which ever is closer, on missed field goals.

In addition, members of the kicking or punting team now can't cross the line of scrimmage until the ball is kicked, except on punts two members of the punting team may leave the line of scrimmage when the ball is snapped.

Coach Dan Devine's team is all set for the foot and post sections of the new rules in the persons of Chester Marcol and Ron Widby. Marcol, who kicked 54 field goals in his first two Packer seasons, will have to strive for virtual perfection from the 40-yard line on in. Widby finished sixth in the NFL last year with his 43.1 average but will be required to punt more for accuracy this season, which he can do.

Ironically, both Marcol and Widby, who rarely get involved in the rough stuff, were bothered with various ailments last season. They'll be facing stiffer assignments in '74 because there will be less margin for error — a longer runback on a poor punt or loss of ground yardage on a missed field goal.

Most of the other rules are designed to soup up the passing game by (1) eliminating role blocking and cutting of wide receivers and (2) restricting the extent of downfield contact a defender is permitted to have with eligible receivers.

This brings up the Packers' passing attack, which ranked 24th in the league last year, and more specifically the quarterbacking.

Jerry Tagge goes into the season as the Bays' No. 1 quarterback but he'll get a stiff challenge from Scott Hunter and Jim Del Gaizo. Hunter, who worked the 1972 championship season, is starting his fourth season; Tagge and Del Gaizo their third.

The Packers' passing undoubtedly will pick up in 1974 due to more freedom for the receivers but this same thing can be said for the other 25 teams.

All three QBs got a shot in 1973, with Tagge getting the nod for this year on the basis of his work as a starter in the last six games, winning three of them. He made his first start in the ninth game and won it, 25-21 over the Cardinals. Then came losses to the Patriots and 49ers before a victory over the Saints. After losing to the Super Bowl Vikings, Tagge presided over a 21-0 win over the Bears in the final.

With a year's experience under his belt, Barry Smith should blossom as a receiver along with Rich McGeorge, Jon Staggers and Leland Glass.

While the new rules are designed for the offense, the defense faces the prospect of making a comeback in '74. This unit was the surprise of the NFL in '72 but was shredded at times a year ago. The group's left side was really damaged with the loss of Dave Robinson to start with (trade), the loss of Willie Buchanon via a broken leg, and a nagging injury that reduced Clarence Williams' efficiency.

Tom MacLeod did an amazing job for a rookie in Robinson's old spot and his improvement will be a vital factor in the unit's comeback—not to mention Bob Brown's perennial weight problem.

And, of course, the defense will have to adjust to the new rules. Coach Dave Hanner sees no particular problem there since the unit is young and adaptable, especially the secondary of Jim Hill, Al Matthews, Ken Ellis and Buchanon. Linebackers Jim Carter, Fred Carr and MacLeod are extremely mobile and the pass rules offer a new challenge. The defensive line could get a real lift if Aaron Brown takes up where he left off in the 1973 final in Chicago.

While passing is getting the notoriety, what with the new rules, the Packer attack's big strength rests with its powerful running game. John Brockington and MacArthur Lane again will carry the brunt but they'll have help from the 240-pound rookie blaster, Barty Smith, and fleet Les Goodman.

The disappointment of the 1973 season has worn away and Devine is highly encouraged by the growing confidence and mounting optimism that set in among the Packers and their fans as spring approached.

This will be Dan's fourth season and he now has a record of 19 victories, 19 losses and four ties. He took over an aging Packer team in 1971 and produced an interesting if not successful (4-8-2) season. Then, out of the blue, Devine whipped the Packers into Central Division champions on the strength of a 10-4 record. The Packers of '73 trailed off to 5-7-2.

The Packers of the last three years did not take a normal course of improvement. Winning the title was wonderful, of course, but it was ahead of schedule and made the record of 1973 that much harder to swallow.

Now . . . what's for '74? A strong comeback and, with a break or two, possibly a championship!

the NFL's new playing rules

SUDDEN DEATH

For all games, but duration limited to 15-minute overtime in pre-season and regular season games.

THE KICKING GAME

1. Move goal posts to end line.
2. Kickoff from 35-yard line.
3. Missed field goals returned to line of scrimmage or 20-yard line whichever is farther from goal line.
4. Members of a team kicking from scrimmage (punt or field goal) cannot cross line of scrimmage until ball is kicked, except on punts two members of the kicking team, one on each side of the line of scrimmage, may leave the line of scrimmage when the ball is snapped.

THE PASSING GAME

Afford wide receivers better opportunity to get downfield by:

1. Eliminating roll blocking and cutting of wide receivers.
2. Restricting extent of downfield contact defender permitted to have with eligible receivers.

PENALTY CHANGE

Penalty for offensive holding, illegal use of hands and tripping reduced to 10 yards from 15 yards, when infraction occurs in area of line of scrimmage and three yards beyond.

BLOCKING CHANGE

Wide receivers blocking back toward the ball three yards from the line of scrimmage cannot block below the waist.

NEW RULES FOOT-NOTES

If a pre-season or regular season NFL game is tied after regulation play, there will be a three-minute timeout before the overtime begins with the receiving team and kicking team determined by a coin toss. A game would end with any score and would finish in a tie only if neither team scored during the 15-minute period. Post-season games will continue until there is a winner.

Items 3 and 4 under "Kicking Game" are related because one objection in the past to returning the ball to the line of scrimmage following missed field goals was that it would only result in more punts. Because of Item 4, freezing the kicking team at the line of scrimmage until the ball is kicked, the feeling is more punt returns and fewer fair catches would result. After experiments last spring, two of what the league referred to as "wide receivers" would be allowed to leave the line of scrimmage at the snap. Incidentally, the penalty for crossing the line of scrimmage before the ball is kicked is 5 yards.

Passing Item 2 limits to once the number of times a defender can "chuck" a receiver after he has advanced three yards beyond the line of scrimmage.

The last time an official NFL game was played with the goal post at the end line was in 1932. The rule was changed prior to the 1933 season — to encourage more scoring via kicking.

The blocking change reduces any crackback blocking by wide receivers flanked more than two yards outside the offensive tackles to contact above the waist. Penalty for violation is 15 yards.

Rich Mc George wants the ball

By DALE HOFMANN
Milwaukee Sentinel

It is the stuff of which daytime serials are made. Soft music in the background, pastoral scenes of the Oneida Street practice field and a velvety voice — ever posing the burning question:

"Can a long suffering tight end find happiness with the earthbound Green Bay Packers?"

RICH McGEORGE MAKES THE BIG CATCH AND EYES RUNNING ROOM AT THE SAME TIME. HE'S THE "DADDY" OF PACKER RECEIVERS WITH FOUR YEARS EXPERIENCE.

It has it all. The strong silent hero who's suffered the crushing reversal of a major injury early in his football life and who faces a daily struggle against overwhelming odds.

Call it "The Life and Times of Rich McGeorge."

As anyone around Green Bay will tell you, McGeorge is some kind of hero anyway. He does everything that's asked of him quietly and very well—whether it's mowing down a massive defensive end or turning a short pass into a long gain.

Dan Devine thought enough of him last season to make him his personal choice as the Packer Offensive Player of the Year. And yet, through no fault of his own, McGeorge toils in relative obscurity despite four years of Packer service, making him the "Daddy" of Packer ends.

Barry Smith, the second year wide receiver, put it this way: "I'll be talking to people about the Packers and they'll ask who our tight end is. He's got my vote for all-pro already, and yet people don't know who he is. He's got all the tools, the good hands, everything.

"You look at the really successful teams in this league, and they all use their tight ends a lot. It would really be bad to waste a guy like that."

John Brockington and MacArthur Lane, the principal benefactors of McGeorge's crushing blocks, will be the first to tell you that the Packers are hardly doing that. Still, there is something McGeorge prizes far more than their gratitude, Devine's praise or Smith's sympathy.

It's called the ball.

McGeorge came into the 1973 season eager to show that a knee injury suffered in the second game of 1972 had cost him none of his receiving skills. The year before the injury he flagged down 27 passes for 463 yards and a very impressive average of 17.1 yards per catch.

Last season his 16.4 average was almost as good. But he compiled it with only 16 catches. It wasn't that the Packer passing game was boycotting McGeorge; it was just that there wasn't much passing. Green Bay finished 24th in the league in that department.

This year, though, McGeorge is hoping that things will be different.

"I really think we have to put it in the air more this year, and I think the coaching staff realizes that," he said. "I know I'd like to catch a lot more passes this year.

"Our game is the great running game, but you have to have passing to go along with it. We have a more mature team this year, and I think we can work shorter and more to the tight end."

There are two pretty good reasons why McGeorge's hopes may be realized in 1974. One is the fact that the Green Bay receivers in general present a brighter picture than they have in the recent past. The other is the prospect of a stable quarterback situation much earlier in the season.

McGeorge, Smith and Jon Staggers appear to be the keystones of the receiving corps. Staggers justified his old college coach's faith in him last year with 22 catches for 340 yards — one for a season high of 50 yards. That was second only to Lane's 27 receptions on the club.

His emergence is one of the bigger reasons why things are looking up for the Packer wide receivers. Another one, according to McGeorge, is Smith.

"Barry Smith is definitely going to be a big star some day," said McGeorge. "You can't do it all in one year, though. He's going to be much better this coming season, with his rookie year behind him. And in two years I think he could be a great one.

"I think our receivers just need experience catching the ball more than anything else," McGeorge went on, adding:

"Staggers and Leland Glass know how to get open. They have speed, maybe not great speed, but certainly enough to do the job.

"And our backs get us five to 10 yards a crack when we throw to them. You have to have that in your passing game, too. My biggest concern is just getting the ball in the air more. Just five or 10 more passes a game is equal to a lot in this league."

Naturally, Smith shares his teammate's concern for getting the ball in the air. The new rule adopted in April limiting the bump and run defense also helps him to share some of his optimism.

"If they had left the hashmarks alone, I don't think they would have had to pass the rule on the bump and run," said Smith. "But I feel pretty good about it. I think it's good for the game, because it opens things up."

Smith's own statistics say something about the Packers' down to earth tendencies, too. He caught only 15 passes.

"Fifteen passes in 14 games is poor," said Smith flatly. "I'm definitely hoping to catch more this year. The year's experience is going to help, of course, but the big thing is confidence. Confidencewise, having a full year behind you is worth just a hell of a lot."

Glass, of course, has two years behind him now, and a couple rookie prospects named Steve Odom and Ken Payne have the kind of collegiate credentials that could push the young veterans for their jobs.

That all adds up to a highly competitive period for the men who catch the ball for the Packers. It will be no less so for the men who throw it. But that competition should end right around September. At least, that's what Devine is hoping, and so is McGeorge.

BARRY SMITH MAKES WITH HIS PATENTED SURE GRIP AFTER CATCHING PASS IN FINAL MINUTES TO HELP GAIN TIE WITH LIONS IN GREEN BAY SEPT. 23.

"Having a settled quarterback situation is going to have a big effect on how much we throw," said McGeorge. "I really don't care who it is, but I think we have to get one quarterback at the beginning and stick with him. If we can do that, I think all the receivers will have more confidence in the guy back there."

It wouldn't do anything to hurt the success of a tight end either. McGeorge does do wondrous things with a football once someone gets it to him, as his yards per catch average will attest. But he'd be willing to sacrifice that shiny statistic for some others.

Asked about the long gainers, he said, "I think we just catch the other teams by surprise when I get the ball. I went half of last season catching maybe four or five passes, and when I finally did get one, I don't think the other team was expecting it.

"A good tight end in this league can expect to catch 20 or more passes in a season, hopefully 30 or 35. I really believe I could catch 35 or 40 a year."

If he did that, there's an excellent chance that McGeorge would achieve the all-pro status that many people believe he deserves.

MIKE McCOY ZEROS IN ON QB NORM SNEAD DURING PACKER-GIANT GAME OCT. 7.

McCOY a critical season

By LEN WAGNER
Green Bay Press-Gazette

A funny thing happened on the way to . . .

It's an old line, usually used to describe someone's unexpected failure. Therefore, it's really not so funny.

Particularly to Packer defensive tackle Mike McCoy.

For four years, McCoy has been trying to live up to his advance billing. And for four years . . . minus one game . . . it has been a frustrating effort. Maybe an impossible one.

Mike McCoy came out of Notre Dame University in 1970 carrying an All-America banner embroidered with "can't miss." He had been a terror on the college gridirons and his reputation had all the glitter of the Golden Dome on the Irish campus.

He might have been, in part, a publicist's creation. It had been known to happen before with college stars. But the pro scouts, not easily fooled, furnished reports almost as gaudy as the Irish news releases.

And the Packers, convinced he was the real McCoy, dealt three veteran players (Elijah Pitts, LeRoy Caffey and Bob Hyland) to the Chicago Bears in exchange for draft rights to him.

And as the 1970 season dawned, a group of well-seasoned Packers watched McCoy during a workout prior to a pre-season game in Oakland. Ray Nitschke shook his head in awe. Willie Wood declared, "He came to play." Bob Jeter predicted, "He's going to be all-pro."

Even defensive coach Dave Hanner, not one to volunteer undeserving plaudits, observed, "He can't help but be great . . . if we coaches don't mess him up."

Since then, the super-sized McCoy has struggled, largely in vain, to live up to that early forecast of greatness.

He has retained the spectacular physical assets which inspired much of that early promise. With 280 pounds of non-fat padding on his 6-foot-5 frame, McCoy has the pure strength needed to ward off any blocker an opponent can offer. In addition, he is gifted with a quickness that should consistently spring him past the line of scrimmage. He has the agility of a halfback. And he has the outright speed to put him at the head of the pursuit.

Looking at him, a handsome, burly blond, you might expect him to disappear into a phone booth at any moment and emerge in a blue and red caped costume in which he would leap tall buildings in a single bounce.

And at times, he has been a superman of a sort on the football field. He has thrilled fans by running down a halfback from behind, but he has all too seldom run down retreating quarterbacks. He has at times, stacked up a charging fullback at the line. But he all too often has been caught fighting off a blocker while the fullback burrows past him.

Somehow, all those bodily talents all too often melt into frustration during the heat of NFL battle and McCoy comes out of the combat as little more than an ordinary tackle doing a journeyman's job. Not quite a Clark Kent, but something less than a Superman.

Each year, optimism grows that McCoy will become the Samson of the defensive line. And each year the coaches insist he's still learning . . . all he needs is better technique . . . give him a little more experience . . . he's improving all the time.

Yet, back in McCoy's rookie season, Hanner said, "That kid is already doing things that you normally see guys who have been in this league four or five years doing for the first time."

But there are several more rational explanations that might better tell why McCoy has not developed as quickly as expected.

One is, in fact, lack of technique in beating a blocker and getting to the quarterback. This lack has been traced in part to the type of defense he played at Notre Dame, a reading, mostly waiting type of line play.

Another is that McCoy, for all his physical attributes, is a mild mannered fellow, a nice guy type. He does not have a killer instinct. In fact, he is a staunch member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and lives a peace-oriented lifestyle. An Alex Karras, he is not.

In addition, he has played injured more than many fans have been aware of over the years, giving whatever he had left despite a series of hurts that have hampered him.

But Mike McCoy has had his moments.

After the November Bear game of 1972, Coach Dan Devine praised McCoy for "his best game since I've been here." And Hanner observed that his pass rush was improving steadily.

But for the most part, it was the same inconsistent McCoy up front until the last game of last year. It was his supreme effort as a Packer, a performance that Packerdom had been waiting to see.

It came against the Bears in Soldier Field. And, though clouded somewhat by the fact that the Bears were experimenting with personnel something below top shelf against him, the fact that McCoy put out as he did with the season already a wipe out, says something in itself.

Undoubtedly the outstanding player on the field, McCoy riddled the Bears for nine unassisted tackles, two assists, three quarterback sacks and a recovered fumble.

That performance triggered additional hope for 1974, hope that Mike McCoy was coming into his own. That hope was converted into questions for Devine during the off season.

Has Mike McCoy reached his potential? Will he ever become the super star he was expected to be? Is he now on his way to all-pro status?

Devine, apparently wondering the same thing, sidestepped the questions.

"He played a fine game against Chicago in the last game of the season," the coach said. "It may have been because he did not have a real top quality man against him but they did try several people against him and nobody could stay with him."

As the Packers attempt to pull themselves back up the standings, this could be a critical season in McCoy's career. There was a time when Devine rated him "untouchable" in the trade market. But indications are that the label is becoming a bit unglued.

Nevertheless, McCoy has been a staple in the Packer defensive line since his arrival on the scene and he figures to remain just that. His potential is still immense and, in fact, he and his colleagues held their own pretty well in the National Conference last year despite the outward appearance of 1973's record.

With McCoy as an anchor, the defense permitted 272.9 yards per game, which ranked fifth in the league. That position, it must be noted with more than casual aplomb, was one rung above the feared resistance of the Central Division champion Minnesota Vikings.

The Packers surrendered 142.8 yards per game on the ground and 130.1 in the air. Considering the Packer offense ranked 12th among the 13 NFC teams, an indication that the defense spent more than its share of time on the field, these defensive figures tend to erode the accuracy of most fans' memories of 1973.

The decay of Clarence Williams' play alongside McCoy was a major disappointment of 1973, although he played hurt in several games. Bob Brown was hardly the Bob Brown of 1972. And Alden Roche, apparently playing out of position at end, was the only reasonably consistent factor in the front four.

Aaron Brown, whose life on the taxi squad for most of the season has never been satisfactorily explained, blossomed in the later games, feeding more optimism to 1974.

If Williams can be brought out of reverse . . . if Roche can be installed at tackle with Aaron Brown at end . . . and if McCoy is finally turning his potential into reality, Packer fans may find their late December optimism justified.

DAN DEVINE

not looking back

By LEE REMMEL
Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations

Like that sage and eminent philosopher, Satchel Paige, Dan Devine is not one to look back. But not for the same reason.

The nomadic Satchel keeps eyes front, he says, "because somebody may be gaining on you."

Devine on the other hand, prefers to look ahead because he is emphatically positive by nature. And, in all candor, he finds it infinitely preferable to the backward glance following 1973's 5-7-2 Pack performance, a season he understandably describes as "very traumatic."

FORMER PACKER PRESIDENT LEE JOANNES CHATS WITH DAN DEVINE DURING SPRING CAMP IN ARIZONA.

Perhaps no one has expressed his feelings better than Abraham Lincoln who, so far as is known, never diagrammed a play in his life. "It hurts too much to laugh," he once said upon losing an election, "and I'm too old to cry."

Devine, an indomitable Irishman with a kindred flair for turning a phrase, now knows what Honest Abe meant. Not that he had never before been exposed to the pain and discomfort of artistic misfortune. But 1973 was bleakly unique in his long and highly successful coaching career — a season in which, on occasion, there was defeat without apparent redemption.

But the Packer coach, a confident, unsinkable type, is quick to dismiss that unexpected nightmare, rendered all the more painful because it had followed a Central Division championship in 1972, and firmly focus on 1974.

"It's true that I'm not used to that kind of thing (his overall, 19-19-4 Packer record is well below that of his collegiate coaching career)," Devine admits, "but there is no time to look back.

"There's not enough time to prepare for '74 and also keep rehashing '73," he says with substantial vigor. "We've got too many irons in the fire. By rehashing the past, you're only spinning your wheels.

"On the other hand, if you don't learn from your experience, you're making a mistake. And I feel, quite honestly, that a healthy squad, plus a few good bounces and eliminating a few key penalties, these things alone can help. How much, I don't know."

Convinced the discontent which inevitably follows that kind of season has been dissolved by the healing powers of time and reasoned self-analysis on the part of all the principals, Devine is openly optimistic about the prospects for success in '74.

DAN DEVINE SHOWS CONCERN DURING LOSS TO VIKINGS IN GREEN BAY DEC. 8.

"I'm very much encouraged," says Dan "by the indication of a positive approach from quite a number of our players, who have either written or called me to say they are determined to have a good season, plus the added year's experience, which has to be of benefit to our young squad.

"And I'm also encouraged because of the fine early camp we had in Arizona, which I was pleased to notice Jerry Tagge described as the best of the three he has taken part in. The attitude and enthusiasm displayed there, by veterans and rookies alike, was very heartening."

Though never one to change purely for the sake of change, Devine admits his coaching approach is likely to be somewhat different than the one he brought to 1973's training camp, attended by high hopes of a trip to the Super Bowl.

"There are things I would do differently than I did them last year, if I had them to do over again," he explained. "Coaches learn by experience, too. For example, I made some changes from '71 to '72 and I also made some from '72 to '73, although not as many.

"As far as 1974 is concerned, I'm talking about changes in everything — alignments, training procedures, everything. Everything, that is, but philosophy. I have never heard of a coach who changed his philosophy. Not anyone," Devine appended with a whimsical smile, "who is still coaching."

His did not change, even amid the dark and painful depths of '73, when the Packers' fate was irrevocably sealed by three successive and resounding mid-season losses to the Rams, Lions and Bears — in company with an exceedingly brisk getaway by the Central champion Minnesota Vikings.

"My philosophy, briefly, is that football is a game that demands a great deal of self-sacrifice, mental discipline and," he added, unable to resist a quip, "some of the old, unacceptable adjectives. Football is a tough, hardnosed game and there is no easy way to win.

"It's very obvious you also need great players to win. That's been the history of the game. Take the case of Miami, right now. The Dolphins have got a collection of great players, people like Larry Csonka, Paul Warfield, Larry Little . . . and like Dick Anderson, Jake Scott, Nick Buoniconti and Garo Yepremian."

Devine, who remains the third most successful head coach in Packer history despite 1973's fall from the Central Division heights, can find no single cause for that precipitate plunge.

"It was caused by a number of things," he says, "Again, there is no good to be derived from attempting to dissect them—except learning from your experiences."

Illustrating the frustration which prevailed, Devine cited the Packers' late November confrontation with John Brockington — ball safely tucked away — hits his hole off tackle, finds it clogged by a mass of bodies and slides along the line. Now head down, legs churning, he discovers a tiny opening in the wall of defenders and bulls his way through. Finally in open terrain, his knees pumping like pistons; he explosively accelerates, ravages a would-be tackler, shrugs off another and runs for 20 more yards before grudgingly succumbing to three frenzied defenders: one draped around his shoulders, another grabbing at his jersey and a third clutching to his thighs.

Such classic Brockington runs, combining locomotive power and resolute desire, have electrified Packer fans for three seasons.

During dark moments — of which there have been many in his rookie year and again last season —the pride within Packer fans still swells and they find something to enthusiastically applaud when Brock gets up a head of steam and displays utter disdain for his adversaries. At times it has even reached a point where attention directed at his personal efforts and accomplishments supersedes that accorded to the team.

Last year, for example, in the second last game of the season against the Minnesota Vikings — after all had been lost — nothing appeared important other than whether Brockington would surpass 1,000 yards. Even the offensive unit resigned itself to that by handing him the ball time after time, regardless of the situation.

Yet John Brockington would gladly trade his status as a 1,000-yard rusher for an opportunity to play in the Super Bowl.

"I'm very pleased with what I've accomplished. I didn't know I'd do that well when I came up here," the 6-foot-1, 225-pound running back said. "Anyway as far as personal accomplishments I'm pretty satisfied. But teamwise I'm not. We've been like a roller-coaster going up and down the last three years. And individual honors always come second to the team.

"I'd like to get to the Super Bowl — that's number one."

Admittedly, he also retains lofty personal ambitions. But there is no reason they should conflict with team interests. Instead, they should be compatible. Individual success should spawn team success.

Unfortunately for Brockington it hasn't worked that way, although 1972 was an exception when the Packers won the Central Division championship. While the Packers have compiled a mediocre 19-19-4 overall record, in three years he has impressively gained 3,276 yards. His sophomore season he became the first runner in the National Football League to surpass 1,000 yards rushing his first two years as a pro. And a year ago he repeated the feat for a third time.

Unlike many contemporary athletes who sneer at tradition and records, Brockington reveres them.

"You know you're in history then — sports history anyway," he said. "You know you've made your mark in your profession. It's your signature on time."

And Brockington, if he has his way, will leave a signature the size of John Hancock's.

For after his foremost ambition, winning a championship, the durable Ohio State product said next, "I'd like to keep my 1,000-yard standard every year. And when I finish out I'd like to be the leading ground-gainer in the game."

Jim Brown, the ex-Cleveland fullback, currently holds that record with 12,512 yards or 9,236 more than Brockington, who has said he would like to play seven more years.

A more immediate and realistic aim is to break the record of five straight 1,000-yard seasons belonging to Jimmy Taylor, the Packers' all-time leading ground gainer with 8,207 yards. "I'd like to go after that one," he ambitiously says.

During his rookie season, Brockington spent numerous hours reviewing old game films of Taylor. And he is exuberant in his praise of him, offering the testimonial: "He was a hell of a runner."

LES GOODMAN — A CHANGE OF PACE BACK.

And again while some of his peers resent being classified and matched with players of bygone eras, Brockington considers it a tribute to be compared with the likes of Brown and Taylor. And inevitably he has been — particularly to Taylor in these parts.

The leading authority on the subject, Red Cochran, offensive backfield coach during both the Taylor and Brockington years, claims, "They are not at all alike," and declines to single out either as the greatest runner he's ever coached.

But he, too, has allowed himself to get caught in the comparison game.

"I have never worked with anyone with the kind of speed Brockington has and with that much size," Cochran asid. "He's not the romping, stomping, run-em-over type like Jimmy Taylor was.

"Tackling Taylor hurt you. It was no fun ever tackling Taylor, but I don't think tackling John would be any fun either. When he sees that contact is inevitable, he lowers the boom himself. But John tries to utilize his speed and get away from defenders, while Jim would rather run over people."

But so much for comparisons with the past.

If Brockington is to realize his ambition of playing in the Super Bowl, it is absolutely essential that the Packers achieve more balance in their running attack.

In 1973, the indefatigable Brockington was responsible for more than half of the Packers' 1,973 rushing total. Beside his contribution of 1,144 yards, MacArthur Lane gained 528 and nobody else picked up over 100.

And according to the candid appraisal of Cochran, Lane, an intense competitor and vicious blocker, "had the worst year running with the football he's ever had in his life."

Plagued by inconsistency, poor judgment and, at times, lack of support, Lane wound up with a meager 3.1-yard average.

"I think he was as disappointed in the year he had as we were in him," Cochran said. "He has a good sense of the game. He's a smart football player. And when he hits people and levels off on them, they know it.

"But last year, it seemed, he'd make a decision on a block and it would be a wrong one. He'd make a decision on a run and it would be the wrong one. And he'd go out on a pass pattern and have an option and make the wrong decision."

In a move designed to give the Packers additional depth at running back, they made Barty Smith, a 6-3, 235-pound power runner from Richmond, their No. 1 draft choice.

Because Smith is primarily a fullback and so is Brockington, the move startled many observers. However, Norm Van Brocklin, coach of the Atlanta Falcons, for one, wasn't surprised. "I can understand it. Barty Smith's a horse — the kind of player you don't pass up a chance to get," he said.

As a senior at Richmond, Smith rushed for 797 yards, owned a 4.3 average, and caught 14 passes.

More use might also be made this season of Les Goodman, a free agent rookie a year ago with the speed to get outside. There is a new breed of runners in the National Football League dubbed change-of-pace backs — Mercury Morris at Miami and Essex Johnson at Cincinnati started out that way—and Goodman seemingly fits that mold.

Two other veterans on the Packer roster, Perry Williams and Larry Krause, have performed almost exclusively on special teams throughout their careers.

MEET BARTY SMITH, THE PACK'S 240-POUND BACK AND FIRST DRAFT CHOICE.

psychic choice
A return specialist

Dan Devine must be psychic. The Packer coach made his fifth draft choice in 1974 a return specialist — fully three months before the NFL changed the rules involving punt and kickoff returns. He was actually the Pack's second pick because the 2nd, 3rd and 4th choices were gone in trades.

The choice is Steve Odom, a little (5-8, 165) whizzer from the University of Utah, who holds five NCAA records: Most yards on kickoff returns for single season (984), most average yards on kickoff returns in one game (89.4), most total kick return yards in career (1228), highest per game average on kick returns (111.6), and career kickoff return yardage (2582). He went 97 yards with the opening kickoff return against Texas Tech in 1973.

Odom, a wide receiver by trade, compiled these other yardage averages at Utah: Kickoff return average 26.1; punt return average 20.3; pass reception 20.1; rush from scrimmage 6.2; per time touched ball 20.9. He scored a touchdown every 8.8 times he touched the ball.

Under the new rule, members of the punting team can't leave their marks until the kick is made, giving people like Odom more running room. In addition, kickoffs will be made from the 35 instead of 40-yard line.

STEVE ODOM

Odom has exceptional speed. He'll do the 40 in 4.4 and he has been clocked at 9.4 in the 100-yard dash.

The Pack's first choice was Barty Smith, the running back out of Richmond, a giant at 240 pounds, who can do the 40 in 4.8 Smith was the best athlete available in the first round and Devine said "Barty filled that qualification to the letter."

Here are the Packers' draft choices and the figures in parens designate the order of selection among the 442 players:

1st Round — Barty Smith, RB, Richmond (12); 2nd — Choice to Miami for Jim Del Gaizo; 3rd — Choice to Minnesota through San Diego (plus Lionel Aldridge) for Jim Hill; 4th — Choice to San Francisco for Al Randolph; 5th — Steve Odom, WR, Utah (116); 6th — Don Woods, RB, New Mexico (134), choice from Bears for draft rights to Zeke Bratkowski; 6th — Ken Payne, WR, Langston (142); 7th — Bart Purvis, T, Maryland (168); 8th — Monte Doris, LB, Southern Cal (194); 8th — Ned Guillet, DB, Boston College (200), choice from Atlanta through New Orleans for Leonard Garrett; 9th — Harold Holton, G, Texas-El Paso (220); 10th—Doug Troszak, DT, Michigan (246); 11th — Eric Torkelson, RB, Connecticut (272); 12th—Randy Walker, K, Northwest Louisiana (298); 13th — Emanuel Armstrong, LB, San Jose State (324); 14th — Andrew Neloms, DT, Kentucky State (350); 15th — Dave Wannstedt, T, Pittsburgh (376); 16th—Mark Cooney, LB, Colorado (402); 17th—Randy Woodfield, WR, Portland State (428).

Linebackers make defense

By BUD LEA
Milwaukee Sentinel

"Championships are won on defense. That's an old saying. And you can add something to that if you want to. Defenses are made by linebackers."

Dave Hanner, the 44 year old architect of the Green Bay Packers defense, made that statement six years ago when the Packers were known as the "Fearsome Forty." At that time three of the best linebackers in professional football — Ray Nitschke, Dave Robinson and Lee Roy Caffey—resided in Green Bay.

Hanner's statement is always applicable. But a Ray Nitschke or a Dave Robinson comes along maybe once or twice in every coach's lifetime and waiting to find the best parts can be painfully long.

TOM MacLEOD PUTS STOP TO CARL GARRETT OF BEARS IN GREEN BAY, NOV. 4.

Today, Hanner believes the Packers have three ideal linebackers. They are big, they are young, and they love to hit.

The middle linebacker is Jim Carter, 6-3, 245 pounds . . . a physical destroyer. The right side linebacker is Fred Carr, a 6-5, 240 pound acrobat. On the left side is Tom MacLeod, a 6-3, 225 pound matador. Carter, 25, is an outspoken product of St. Paul. Carr, 27, is a holler guy from Phoenix. MacLeod, 23, is a laconic native of Proctor, Minn. All were highly touted draft selections.

Carr was known as a super athlete and had the potential to play anywhere when the Packers picked him up on the first round in 1968. He was the most valuable player in the 1971 Pro Bowl and also was selected to play in the 1972 and 1973 Pro Bowls. Carter, a three year starter, was picked for the 1974 Pro Bowl. MacLeod was named to Pro Football Weekly's 1973 all-rookie team and was the Packers' rookie of the year.

Despite backgrounds that often left them in different worlds, Carr, Carter and MacLeod welded into a unit that Hanner called cohesive.

"I wouldn't trade the three linebackers we have now for any three in the league," Hanner said. "And I think all of them are going to get better."

Nobody on the Green Bay coaching staff would admit it publicly, but the Packers took one hell of a chance starting MacLeod last year. Not only was he a raw rookie who had to learn to play one of the most difficult positions in professional football, but he was stepping in where Dave Robinson stepped out. Finding another Dave Robinson was all but impossible. Replacing his vacated spot with a rookie . . . well?

Coach Dan Devine, however, was confident that the rookie from Minnesota could do the job. MacLeod showed evidence of some very good play midway through the 1973 preseason games.

"We're not thinking in terms of trying to cover a weakness," Devine remarked last August. "If the guy you have there doesn't do the job, there's nothing anyone can do. It just makes it a lot tougher on everyone else. I think we made the right decision on MacLeod. As far as a trade is concerned, there just isn't anyone available who's as good as what we have."

So the education of young Tom MacLeod began in earnest. Here was a rookie who had been exposed to linebacking only in his senior year. He had to learn the trade from the bottom floor and learn it fast.

It takes a gifted athlete to play linebacker. Like MacLeod, most of them are developed in the pros. Nitschke was a fullback at Illinois. Robinson was a tight end at Penn State. Carr was a defensive end at Texas El-Paso.

Although he was on a crash program to fit into Green Bay's defense, MacLeod knew the possibility of being cut is one that lives with everyone. He tried not to dwell on it because he was up to his hip pads in work.

"Being cut is not something you want to think about," MacLeod said. "You just try to shut it out of your mind. You know it's a possibility, but that's very negative thinking.

"I don't know what I'd do if I were cut. I just hope I never come up against it. There's enough other things on your mind."

There were things on the other players minds, too. Carter said he was frankly worried about starting the season without Robinson at left linebacker.

"I though to myself, 'Well, we're just going to have to all help pick up our share of the load,' " Carter said. "We were going to have an inexperienced man at left linebacker, and he was going to have to try to replace someone as good as Robinson, and that was all there was to it."

MacLeod, to say the least, was on the spot. When the regular season started, he could not have asked for a tougher setting: He was facing Joe Namath and the New York Jets before a sellout crowd of 48,000 at Milwaukee County Stadium, plus 20 or so million Monday night football fanatics.

Namath had worked as hard as he had ever worked preparing for the Packers. He studied every move of the Green Bay defense. He liked what he saw, especially at left linebacker.

The Jets opened strong. They kicked off and held the Packers, and then Namath took command. After Emerson Boozer's run moved the Jets close to midfield, Namath hit Jerry Barkum for 13 yards. Then he hit Barkum again for 19 more. Then he hit Jim Nance for five more. Namath was 3 for 4 and down on the Green Bay 15-yard line.

On second and five, Tom MacLeod blitzed through the New York line untouched and pinned Namath for a 10 yard loss. Namath had never seen MacLeod coming.

For all practical purposes, MacLeod earned his starting status right there. The Jets never threatened again until the closing minutes of the game. Green Bay won, 23-7, and its defense looked great.

Carter, who has an almost arrogant air of self confidence, liked the quiet kid from his alma mater. "I'd tell him something and I wouldn't know if he was listening or whether he thought I was giving him some bull or what," Jim said. "But we got out on the field and I knew he heard me because he knew what to do. You don't have to tell him twice."

The fact that good defenses and good seasons go together is reflected in 1972 when Green Bay's defense ranked first in the National Conference and the Packers won the Central Division title.

After five games of the 1973 season, the defense had given up just five touchdowns but Green Bay's record was only 2-1-2. The trouble was a sputtering offense that couldn't score. Everyone on the defense had the right to feel frustrated. And they did.

"I think consciously and subconsciously many of us tried to cover that left side too much," said Carter, attempting to analyze the breakdowns on defense after Willie Buchanon went out for the season with a broken leg in the sixth game at Los Angeles.

Then in the 10th game of the season at Foxboro, Mass., MacLeod pulled up lame with a groin injury. He was replaced by another rookie, Tom Toner.

Toner, a sixth round draft choice from Idaho State, was a defensive end in college and had never played a minute of linebacking before joining the pros. That, he admitted, was the biggest adjustment in his young career. Toner played three games and received better than passing grades from the Packer coaching staff in all of them.

The Packers' fifth linebacker is Larry Hefner, a 14th round draft choice from Clemson who has been a backup to Carter for two years. Like Toner, Hefner has been patiently waiting in the wings for a chance to play.

Despite its relative lack of experience, there is a certain statuesque quality about the Packers' linebacking corps. Hanner is optimistic. "I think we're going to have good play from our linebackers," he said. "Our people are young, they have size and they want to learn."

Carter put it another way: "Every week we'd sit there on Tuesday and watch the films and know we could play better. We went from 10-4 down to 5-7-2 with the same people. Really, there is no reason why we can't go back up there again."

QUARTERBACK JIM DEL GAIZO BARELY GETS PASS OFF IN FRONT OF VIKINGS ALAN PAGE AND JIM MARSHALL IN FIRST START AT MINNESOTA SEPT. 30.

TAGGE a winner

By Len Wagner
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Mrs. Devine's turkey was delicious, but Mr. Devine was much more interested in a Cornhusker on Thanksgiving Day, 1971. Not even another wedge of pumpkin pie could lure him away from television set in his wooded, secluded home on rim of Green Bay's far west side that afternoon.

The attraction was the Nebraska-Oklahoma college football game. The national championship was hinged to the outcome of the Big Eight rivalry and Devine, being a former conference antagonist of both schools while serving as strategist for the University of Missouri, found the game entrancing.

And as the contest, a fierce struggle between two highly-charged, precisely prepared gridiron armies, progressed, Devine took particular interest in the quarterback of the Nebraska team.

A lumberjack type at a well muscled 6-foot-2, 220 pounds, the quarterback was not exceptionally quick or slick. In fact, he sort of stomped off and on the field and once fumbled the ball while trying to deal it from hand to hand behind his back.

Nevertheless, Jerry Tagge caught the Packer coach's eye.

JERRY TAGGE

"I had seen Jerry play in college while I was at Missouri, of course," Devine says. "But I was particularly interested in seeing him in that Oklahoma game because I knew what it was like to play at Oklahoma. It's not an easy place to play.

"I knew Jerry wasn't rated too high. He was about like Jaynes (Colorado quarterback David Jaynes) this year. He figured to be about a third or fourth round draft choice.

"If he would have had an arm like Plunkett or speed like Manning or Pastorini, he would have been rated much higher. But in that game at Oklahoma, I was impressed with the way he moved the team in that drive late in the game. It was a real pressure situation and one mistake would have killed the drive and Nebraska's chances."

As it turned out, there was no mistake. Taking over the ball on the Nebraska 26 with 5:30 left in the game and the Huskers trailing 31-28, Tagge deftly maneuvered the team the entire distance, stabbing at Sooner holes with halfback Jeff Kinney and drilling an 11-yard pass to Johnny Rodgers on third down from the Oklahoma 46.

And with 1:38 on the clock, Kinney dove over from two yards out to give Nebraska the victory. Tagge, who had been forced to change to a second and then a third jersey as the Sooners ripped them from his hide during the afternoon, told reporters later, "We never even thought about losing . . . only about scoring."

To those acquainted with Tagge, it was a familiar sort of refrain. In fact, just about four years before, Tagge had faced a similar situation while performing for Green Bay West High School.

The Wildcats were playing Sheboygan South in Lambeau Field, the last game of the year and West needed a win for the conference championship. But South was leading 9-7, having just scored with 2:53 left in the game. As South lined up for the kickoff, West Coach Jerry Dufek huddled with his quarterback, pointing to the scoreboard with its frightening score and time remaining figures.

Tagge looked at the flickering board and then back to his coach and declared, "Don't worry, Coach, there's plenty of time."

Thirty-five seconds later, Tagge calmly shed two would-be tacklers and pitched to his favorite receiver, split end Dave Mason (now a New England Patriot defensive back), who wormed his way downfield and into the end zone. Touchdown, victory, championship!

"There are some intangibles in there with Jerry," Devine says now in recalling that Thanksgiving spectacular and updating his career.

Intangibles like poise, confidence, leadership and a greedy determination that he converts readily into personal opportunism.

When Tagge was still in junior high school, his coach asked the team who wanted to play quarterback. Nobody responded. Apparently everyone was too shy. So Coach Wally Lambert gave just about every kid a chance and it turned out Tagge was the only one who could throw the ball. He became quarterback practically by default but quickly proved himself capable. "In our first game, Jerry just took over and ran the team and we ran away with the score," Lambert remembers.

In high school, Coach John Biolo needed a halfback and saw his veteran quarterback, Jim Anderson, as a possibility . . . if Tagge could cut it at quarterback. He tried it and Tagge immediately became a super prep, gaining All-State honors as a senior.

At Nebraska, he began as the No. 8 quarterback of nine on the freshman team. But by the time his sophomore year began, he was alternating with another soph, Van Brownson, as the varsity starter. Midway in his junior year, Brownson was hurt and Tagge stepped in on a fulltime basis. Brownson recovered but never again reached alternating status.

Following his senior year, capped by a demolition of Alabama in the Orange Bowl, Tagge awaited a pro contract, frankly admitting that in all honesty, football was his "major" in college.

Back in Green Bay, Devine, while discussing the upcoming draft, casually suggested that Tagge might go higher than some people thought.

And indeed he did. The Packers plucked him as their second choice on the first round, a pick obtained from San Diego in exchange for Kevin Hardy.

"It was pretty much my decision," Devine acknowledges. "He still wasn't rated that high but the games against Oklahoma and Alabama played big parts in making up my mind."

Devine described Tagge as "a winner," the sort of commodity no coach has enough of on his roster.

But the rookie injured his leg in an exhibition game against the Bears and by the time he fully recovered, the season was almost used up. Besides, Scott Hunter was taking the Packers to the Central Division title and was not about to be dislodged.

A year ago, Hunter came to camp No. 1. But his position was precarious, as indicated when Devine traded for Miami reserve Jim Del Gaizo. And by midway in the season, it was becoming evident that neither of them were producing enough points and the Packers were floundering.

Finally, in the ninth game of the year, Tagge was named the starter. He was back in Lambeau Field, scene of his high school heroics, and he was quarterbacking the Packers against the St. Louis Cardinals.

And the Packers won . . . with Tagge guiding the team 66 yards to set up a clinching Chester Marcol field goal from the 9-yard line with 1:46 left. The score was 25-21 and that was the highest point production the Pack enjoyed all year.

Tagge started the last six games of the season and the Packers won three of them. One of the defeats was a 33-24 verdict in New England that came about despite Tagge completing 17 of 23 passes for 267 yards. For the season, Tagge hit 56 of 106 for 720 yards. His 52.8 per cent accuracy was about nine percentage points higher than Del Gaizo and 11 more than Hunter.

Is it any wonder Devine announced that Tagge was now No. 1?

He had been given his opportunity and he seized it with that same tenacity that had marked his entire career.

Whether he continues in that position is strictly up to him. Devine admits that there always will be competition for the position . . . any position. But he is a firm believer in having a No. 1 quarterback.

"I'm never going to be satisfied being the No. 2 quarterback," is the way Tagge looks at his third year in the league. But then Del Gaizo said "If I felt I wasn't good enough to be anything other than a backup, I wouldn't be satisfied." And Hunter candidly says "I haven't even considered the possibility" of being No. 2.

New quarterback Coach Perry Moss says ". . . the quarterback who gets points on the scoreboard is going to be doing the playing."

And that has always been Tag's bag.

No. 15 retired

Bart Starr's famed No. 15 will be worn no more by the Packers.

Mr. Quarterback's Jersey Number was officially mothballed during ceremonies between halves of the Packer-Cardinal game in Lambeau Field Nov. 11. Bart played 16 years with the Pack, 1956-71.

Starr was presented with his jersey as his family — wife Cherry and sons Bart Jr. and Brett — looked on from his side on the field and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Starr, watched from the stands. Starr received a standing ovation after declaring his thanks to the Packers, his parents, his family and the fans.

Starr is only the third Packer in their long history to have his number officially retired in ceremonies. Don Hutson's No. 14 was put to rest during the Packer-New York Yankee game in Green Bay Dec. 2, 1951, though he finished his career in 1945. Tony Canadeo's No. 3 was retired during Canadeo Day at the Packer-Dallas Texan game in Green Bay Nov. 23, 1952.

the HONOR ROLL

The Honor Roll of Packer Players is herewith presented for the fourth time in the 15-year history of the Green Bay Packer Yearbook.

The listing of players in the first Yearbook in 1960 contained 519 names. It jumped to 555 in the 1963 presentation and 615 in 1969. The all-time listing of players through 1973 has 705 names.

Thus, the total leaped by 186 players from 1960 through 1973 — an average of slightly more than 12 per year. The turn-over was much less during the winning 1960s — a total of only 96 from 1960 to 1969 for an average of about 10.

There were many longevity changes since the last list was published in 1969. Buckets Goldenberg, Dave Hanner and Bart Starr were the leaders then with 13 years of action each.

Starr is now the grand dad of all Packers with 16 seasons of action followed by Ray Nitschke with 15, Forrest Gregg with 14, Hanner and Goldberg with 13 and Joe Laws, Max McGee and Willie Wood with 12.

These eight are the hard core of the Longevity List and, ironically, none was a first draft choice. Starr was a 17th pick out of Alabama in 1956. Gregg was a No. 2 out of SMU in 1956 and missed one season due to military service. Nitschke, former Illinois ace, was No. 3 in 1958. Hanner, now the Packers' defensive coordinator, was a fifth pick from Arkansas in 1952. McGee was a No. 5 out of Tulane in '54 and missed two years for the military.

Goldenberg and Laws came into pro football before the college player draft, which was started in 1936. Goldenberg was a star fullback out of Wisconsin, joining the Pack in 1933, and Laws, an all-around southpaw halfback out of Iowa, came up in 1934. Their longevity is especially noteworthy because they played both offense and defense through most of their careers.

Wood, a quarterback at Southern Cal, never was drafted. He wrote the Packers for a tryout and was signed as a free agent in 1960. He turned out to be one of the NFL's best defensive backs. He won all-pro honors six times and played in five Pro Bowl games.

Quick quiz: What first choice played the longest with the Packers?

That would be Dave Robinson, the ace linebacker from Penn State, who was picked No. 1 in 1963. He played 10 years in Green Bay, retired, and then unretired for a whirl with the Washington Redskins in 1973.

Here's the list of Packer players:

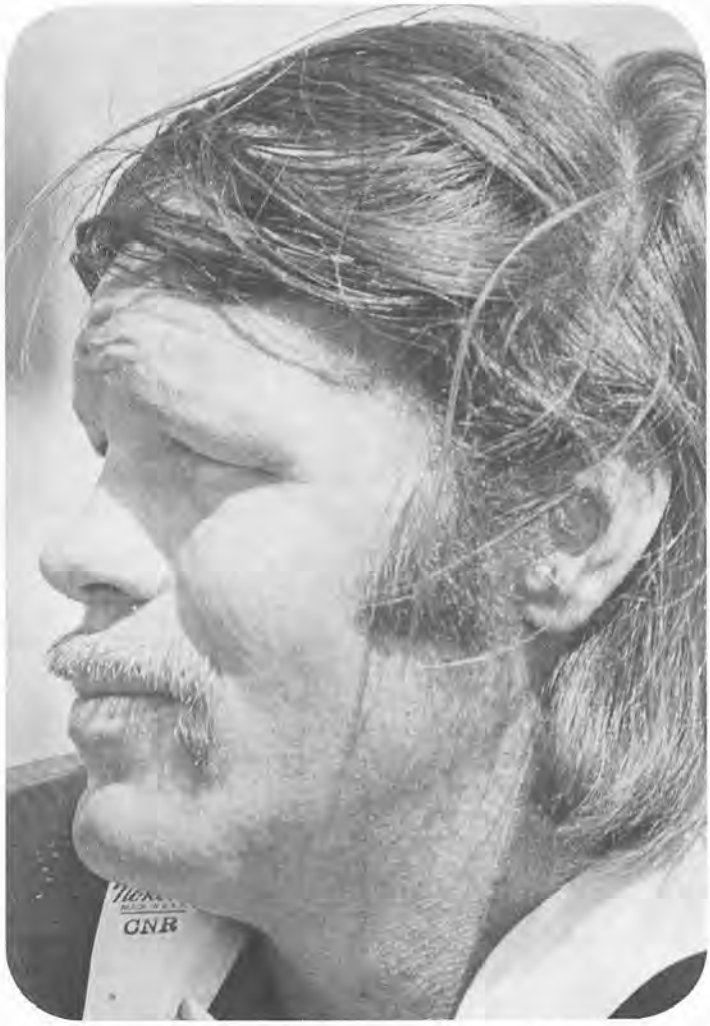
Tradition at center

By JOHN L. PAUSTIAN
Appleton Post-Crescent



KEN BOWMAN COMPLETES 10 SEASONS

Unlike the Abdul-Jabbars and Chamberlains of pro basketball, football centers toil in relative obscurity. The average National Football League fan would be hard pressed to name more than four or five of the current 26 starting centers. Most centers are inconspicuous until they make a glaring mistake.

CHARLEY BROCK

This generalization doesn't really apply to Green Bay, however. Knowledgeable Packer backers not only appreciate the skills demanded of the man who puts the ball into play but have elevated a number of these centers to heroes' pedestals alongside the quarterbacks, wide receivers, running backs, linebackers, etc. It's likely, maintains the thinking fan, that one reason Green Bay has won more NFL championships than any other team is that the Pack has been blessed with more good centers than any one else in the league.

Jug Earp, the first of the Packers' big center talents, held forth on the 1929-30-31 title teams. George Svendsen manned the pivot position for the '36 Packer champions. In the 1939 and '44 glory seasons, Charley Brock was the man in the middle. Jim Ringo starred at center for the 1961-2 championship clubs. And, in the triple title era of 1965-66-67, Ken Bowman presided at center.

Earp, Svendsen and Brock have already been enshrined in the Packer Hall of Fame, along with center Bernard (Boob) Darling, an Earp contemporary.

Brock, who doubled as a linebacker during his stint (1939-47) in the one-platoon era, agrees with the conclusion about the quality of Packer centers. "Green Bay has been lucky to get so many good centers and to hang on to them for such a long time," Brock said.

What a center's job lacks in glamor, it makes up for in security. For example, the brawny Earp and eight-time all-pro Ringo served the Packers for 11 years apiece. The durable and tenacious Bowman has rounded out a full decade. The quick and versatile Brock held the job nine years, while the burly Svendsen played the position for seven years, as did Bob Flowers and Ed Neal.

A rare changing of the guard (or rather, of the center) seems near. Who will succeed Bowman as the next long-term center? Will it be the promising young Larry McCarren? Will it be a big offensive tackle or guard switched to center? Or will it be a collegian not yet drafted?

Whoever it is will have a notable tradition to live up to, a tradition no one better exemplifies than Charley Brock. Brock, working in the "Notre Dame single wing" era (Coach Curly Lambeau didn't introduce the T formation until Brock's last year), excelled in all facets of the art, including a vital one no longer in use. Brock made a snap, rather than a hand-back, on every offensive play. He recalls that he "led" his backs by from one to 3½ yards, depending upon the type of play and the speed of the runners. Among the backs he collaborated with were Cecil Isbell, Andy Uram, Ted Fritsch, Clark Hinkle, Arnie Herber, Joe Laws, Lou Brock (Charley's second cousin) and Bruce Smith. The kickers were Hinkle, Fritsch, Irv Comp, Lou Brock and Ward Cuff.

"The toughest part of the job was probably the punt snaps," recalls Charley, "but I never did have much trouble because of the amount of time I practiced." Brock said he worked an hour to 1½ hours a day on centering the ball. One reason for the diligence was his awareness that a bad delivery can cost a ball game. Brock remembers that in 1938 — the year before he came to Green Bay — an errant snap by Darrell Lester gave the Bears their safety in a 2-0 victory over the Packers in a driving rainstorm.

JIM RINGO

Timing between the center and the holder (on field goals and extra points) is as important now as it was then, Brock points out. "If you don't put the ball in the right spot, a fraction of a second is lost, and that can make it possible to block a kick."

Although Brock concedes that today's centers don't have a "snap" — especially in view of the increasing use of the "nose man" by opposition defenses — he believes it was tougher in his day. "You had your head down and couldn't see what the defensive man was doing," explained Charley. "Today, the center has an advantage in that he can keep his head up and can watch the guy playing in front of him and also has one arm free to protect himself." Brock added that a center no longer has to perform 60 minutes, as he did.

Brock, who played against five, six and seven-man lines, had five nose breaks to attest to the roughness of play. (The absence of face guards in those days contributed to the casualty statistic). Charley recalls one of those fractures in particular. It happened in Detroit. This Lion (Charley can't remember his name, but his number was 52) zeroed in on Brock's nose with his fist while the center was launching the play. When Brock came into the huddle bleeding, Buckets Goldenberg wanted to know what was going on. "He's beating hell out of me," replied Brock. Goldenberg took note of this, and, as soon as Green Bay went on defense, he took care of the offending Lion with considerable dispatch. "Is that the guy?" Buckets asked as the Detroiter was being helped off the field. "That's the guy," Brock assured him, and the case was closed.

Brock was succeeded, in '48, by Ed Neal, a guard who was transformed into a center. Jay Rhodemyre, Hal Faverty and Clayton Tonnemaker were other Packer centers until the Ringo era started in '53. Tonnemaker was named all-pro at center, in 1950, by a news service, but his later Packer service came in a linebacking role. Ringo, who started a perennial all-pro run in '57, anchored the talented offensive line in the first five years of the Vince Lombardi regime, then was dealt to Philadelphia.

Bowman was drafted out of the University of Wisconsin in '64 and was destined to become one of the foundation rocks of the next title span. Though Bowman is 15 to 20 pounds heavier than the 220-pound Brock was in his playing days, he is not considered a big center. But, Bowman had a lot going for him in his battles with massive defensive linemen.

Bowman's attributes include quickness, intelligence and experience, Rollie Dotsch, Packer offensive line coach, points out. Dotsch likens a center of Bowman's caliber to a veteran quarterback. "It's a hard to beat experience, and after X number of years, it's hard for a newcomer to beat a guy out for the center position."

Bowman is proficient at calling the type of blocking used on a given play. He recognizes the set and makes the appropriate call to 4 Years—Frank Butler 1934, 36-38; Earl Svendsen 1937-40; Ken Iman 1960-63.

3 Years — Tom Greenfield 1939-41; Bob Hyland 1967-69; Walt Niemann 1922-24; Clayton Tonnemaker 1950, 53-54; Cal Withrow 1971-73; Art Bultman 1932-34.

the interior line before the quarterback's cadence starts, Dotsch explains. Bowman has been snapping the ball on field goal and extra point tries, while Cal Withrow has handled the centering on punts. The technique on place-kick snaps is critical, Dotsch notes, because it is necessary to get the right amount of speed on the ball so the laces come into the holder's hand correctly.

What do pro scouts look for in center prospects? "No. 1," says Dotsch, "he must have more size than in the past because of the types of defenses—odd-man fronts with a big guy over the center—being used currently. It becomes harder for the small man to stay in there."

Comparatively few good, big centers are coming out of the college ranks, Dotsch indicates. "You look for someone with size and quickness, then make him over to fit your system."

One point in sophomore McCarren's favor is that he played center throughout his collegiate career (Illinois) and has thus piled up good experience, Dotsch says. McCarren's size is also promising. The 6-foot-3 former Illini captain has grown to about 248 and should get even bigger. Other qualities McCarren has exhibited include consistency, dependability and a tolerance for hard work.

It might eventually turn out that Bowman hand-picked his successor, since Ken recommended McCarren for the 1973 draft. If Bowman retires, the Packers might well transfer one of their other linemen to center to assure depth at the position, Dotsch reports.

A new dimension has been added to the center's play because more than half the NFL teams now use odd fronts extensively, according to Dotsch. The offensive is forced to make constant changes in its blocking, because the "nose guy" must be sealed off, Dotsch emphasizes. The center is a key man in this maneuver.

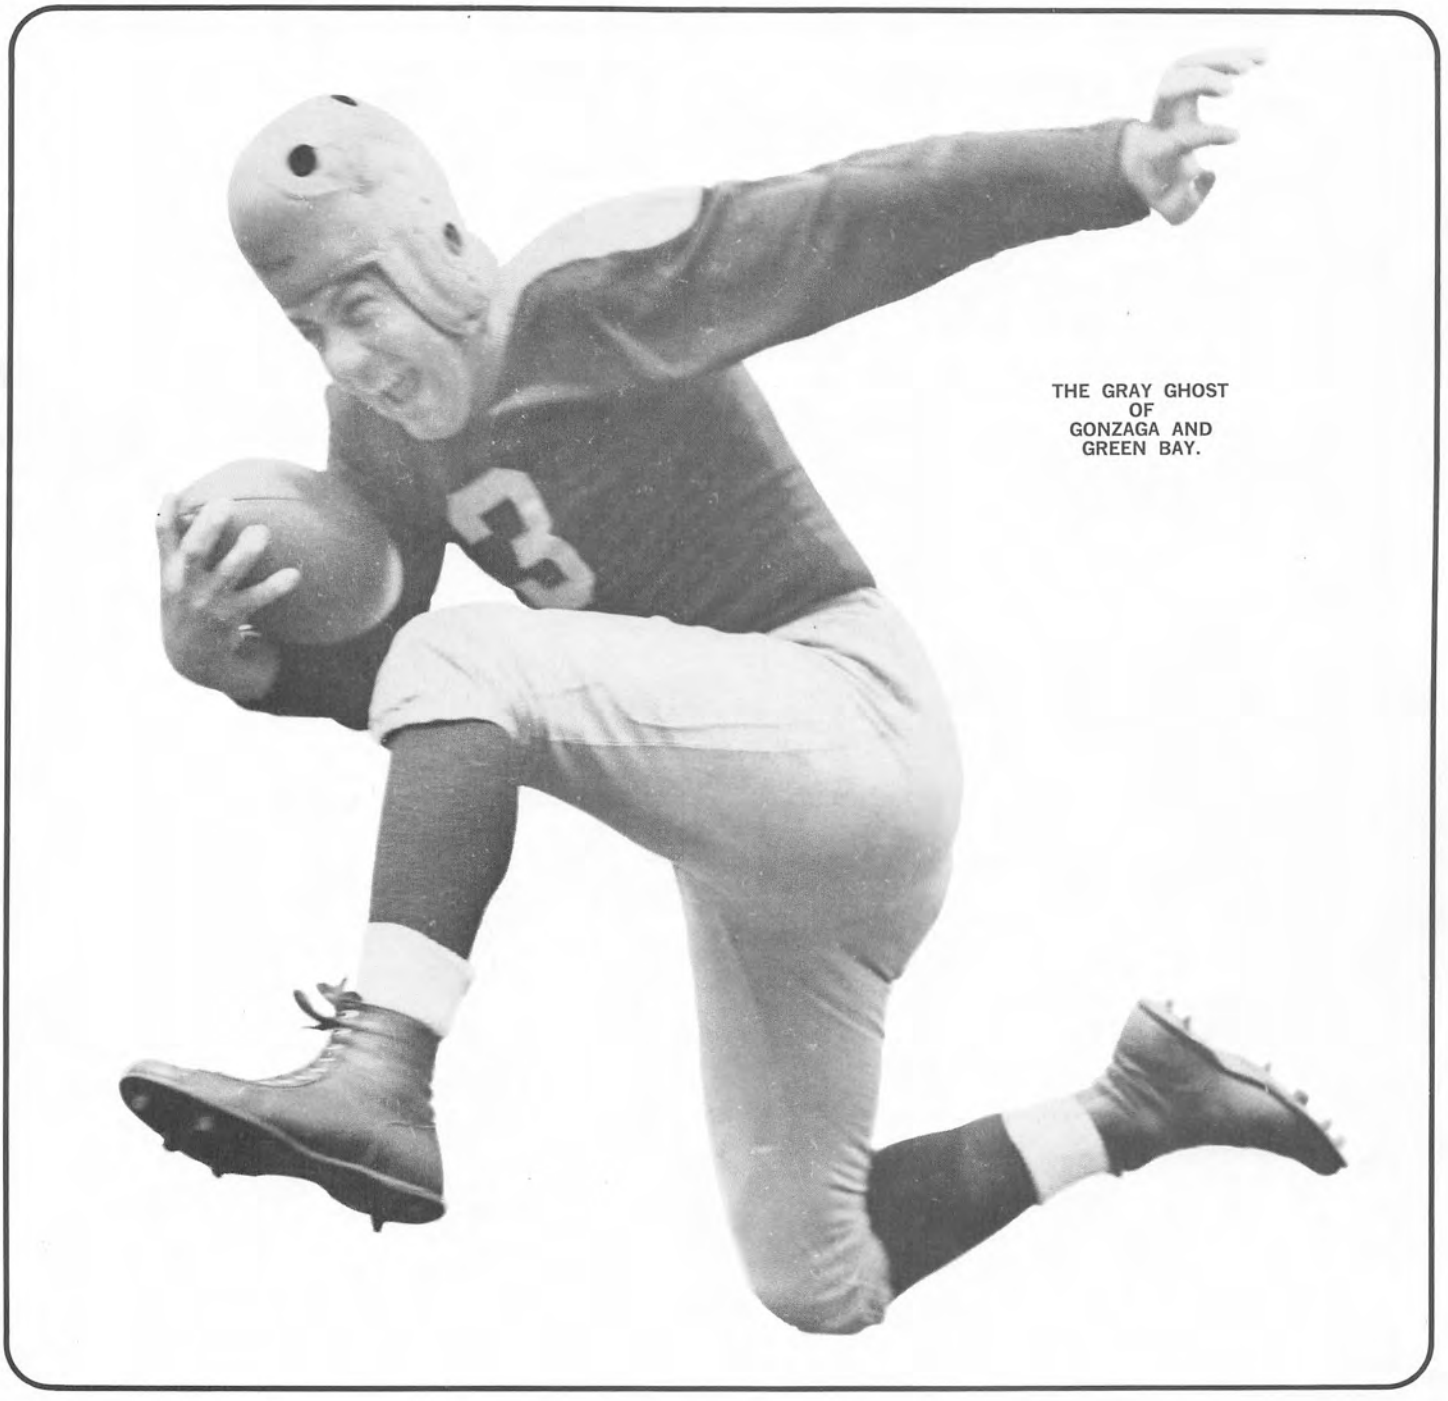
HALL of FAME opens for CANADEO



THE GRAY GHOST
GONZAGA AND GREEN BAY.

Tony Canadeo was a tough, versatile halfback of classic courage during his 11-year Packer career.

He was the first Packer and only the third runner in National Football League history to rush for 1,000 yards in a single season.

He accounted for an average of 75.8 yards by all methods in each of his 116 NFL games.

He was the first and really only successful do-everything back in Packer history.

And, needless to say, he's in the National Pro Football Hall of Fame at Canton, Ohio.

Canadeo was chosen by the Hall's Board of Selectors along with Bill George, former Chicago Bear linebacker; Lou Groza, the onetime Cleveland Brown tackle and Defensive Back Dick (Night Train) Lane of the Detroit Lions.

They make up the 1974 Hall of Fame Class and were enshrined during elaborate ceremonies at Canton on July 27.

Canadeo played 11 seasons, coming up as a seventh round draft choice out of Gonzaga University in 1941. The name Canadeo wasn't new to Green Bay then. Tony's brother, Savvy, was an international Golden Gloves champion at St. Norbert College at the time.

Known as the "Gray Ghost of Gonzaga" due to prematurely gray hair, Tony got off to a flying start, scoring three touchdowns in his first three games in '41. As a tailback, he took over as chief passer for the Packers in 1943 when Cecil Isbell retired and he promptly won his first all-NFL honors.

Actually, Canadeo might have blossomed as a passer for Green Bay but World War II intervened and he was able to play only four games in 1944 — on furlough from the Army. He spent 1945 with a Tank company in Europe but returned to the football wars in 1946. He made all-pro a second time in 1949 when he rushed for 1,052 yards — a fantastic feat in view of the Packers' losing season (2-10).

A hard-hitting and courageous 195-pounder, who stood 5-11, Canadeo displayed all-around talents that few NFL stars have ever been called on to exhibit.

Canadeo's career ledger (and who ever heard of a specialist in his day) showed that he rushed for 4,197 yards in 1,025 carries; caught 69 passes for 579 yards; scored 186 points on 31 touchdowns; completed 105 passes for 1,642 yards and 16 touchdowns; intercepted nine passes and returned them for 129 yards; returned 45 punts for an 11.3-yard average; ran back 71 kickoffs for 1,626 yards and a 22.9-yard average; and punted 45 times for an average of 37.0 yards.

What doesn't show up in the figures is the fearful pounding Canadeo took—without complaint, especially since he was the Packers' offense (period) in the Pack's lean years.

Asked what he remembers about the major achievement of his pro career, that 1,000-yard season, Canadeo replied, "I guess it was what everybody was shooting for that year. We only won two games in

'49, so there wasn't much else to cheer about.

"I had a lot of good teammates who were pulling for me to get a thousand yards, I know," said Tony, whose rushing yards still rank second only to Jim Taylor's 8,207 in Packer history.

Chuckling, he added, "We didn't have Astroturf or the hash marks moved in or the 14-game schedule then. We played 12 games. People ask me, 'What do you say now, with all the 1,000-yarders there are today,' and I say, 'I'm one of the two guys who made it without a mask. That's about the only distinction I have left. Beattie Feathers was the only other 1,000-yarder who didn't wear a mask.

"I played defense a few games that 1,000-yard year, too," noted Tony, who averaged an impressive 5.1 yards per try while rolling up 1,052 in 208 attempts to join Feathers and Steve Van Buren in the then exclusive "club."

Canadeo concedes he would have a different role if playing now.

"I'd have to be a one-way player, he said. "That's why it's faster today — they even have specialists for returning kicks. You can specialize and work on one thing."

Canadeo is quick to admit he would delight in being "active" now.

"Sure, I'd like to be playing today—for the pension alone," he assured. "Do you realize that at my age (55) and, if I were in the pension plan, I'd be eligible then for a pension of something like $675 or $700 a month. We (he and all other players who played prior to 1959) get zilch."

TONY CANADEO HEARS THE HALL OF FAME NEWS.

Informed of his selection to the Hall of Fame last February, Canadeo said "you always hope but you never expect it. I wasn't prepared for it when it came. Every football player wants to get into the Hall of Fame. It's the ultimate. I'm honored that they would think enough of me to induct me.

"Every lawyer wants to be a Supreme Court justice and every doctor wants to discover a cure for cancer," Canadeo pointed out. "So what's left for the football player?"

Victim of a near-fatal illness two years ago, he admitted the honor has a particularly poignant significance for him as a result.

"I'm glad I'm here to see it — while I'm alive," said Canadeo, whose life was spared by a 1972 kidney transplant, a gift from his son, Robert.

"I'm proud for my family, too. I know they're proud of it. And I'm proud for my school. They're not even playing football at Gonzaga any more and I guess I'm the only one from there to make the Hall of Fame.

"I'm also proud for the Packers. I join some great players who made it before me. And I'm proud for Green Bay. It's the only team I ever played for, so I share it with them.

"I'm proud, too, to have played under Coach Lambeau (E. L. Lambeau, the Packers' late founder and first coach) and Coach Ronzani, and to have been a friend of Vince Lombardi, with whom I worked as a member of the Packer executive committee.

"I'm so proud of the group I'm going in with," Canadeo added. "Night Train Lane was fabulous and so were Bill George and Lou Groza. I had a chance to play against every one of them."

With family alone, Tony had strong support at the enshrinement ceremonies. In addition to his wife, Ruthe, there were the five Canadeo children, Bob, Tom, Tony, Mary (Gunn) and Nancy.

There also are three grandchildren — but no future halfbacks.

"They're all girls," Tony chuckled.

The Record Book

PACKER HUNDRED POINTER TED FRITSCH, SR., SHAKES WITH HIS SON, TED, JR., WHO PLAYS CENTER FOR THE ATLANTA FALCONS.

Scoring and such . . . Chester Marcol, the Packers' marvelous kicking specialist, averaged 105 points in his first two seasons.

At that rate he could break Don Hutson's fabled record of 823 points as early as 1979.

Marcol now has 210 points on 48 extra points and 54 field goals. Hutson produced his total on 105 touchdowns, 172 PATs and 7 field goals, averaging 74.8 points in each of his 11 seasons. Marcol scored 128 points as a rookie in 1972 and 82 last season.

Chances of Marcol averaging 100 through '79, however, diminished last spring when the NFL moved the goal posts back on the end line and ordered the ball back to the line of scrimmage (20 and out) after a missed kick.

As an example, a kick from the 35, pretty much of a sure thing for Chester (he hit .750 on 21 of 28 from 30-39 in 2 years) becomes a 45-yarder and, horrors, if he misses the ball comes back to the 35.

Thus, there could be fewer kicks and maybe Marcol will have to wait until the early 1980s. But he has the time . . . Chester will turn 25 early in the 1974 season (Oct. 24).

The success of the Packers will also have a major bearing on Marcol's progress and, of course, his successes in turn can influence and at times win many games.

Marcol is the only kicking specialist in Packer history to score over 100 points and he is only one of five to reach the three-number mark, joining end Hutson, halfback Paul Hornung, fullback Jim Taylor and fullback Ted Fritsch.

THE HUNDRED POINTERS

	TD	PAT	FG	FGA	TP
1942 — Don Hutson	17	33	1	4	138
1943 — Don Hutson	12	36	3	5	117
1946 — Ted Fritsch	10	13	9	17	100
1960 — Paul Hornung	15	41	15	28	176
1961 — Paul Hornung	10	41	15	22	146
1962 — Jim Taylor	19	0	0	0	114
1964 — Paul Hornung	5	41	12	38	107
1972 — Chester Marcol	0	29	33	48	128

(All led NFL in scoring except Paul Hornung in 1964)

Hornung broke the barrier three times and holds the Packer and league record—176 in 1960. Hutson hit 138 in 1942 and 117 in 1943. In fact, Hutson was the first player in NFL history to reach 100 and his 138 stood until Hornung set the mark in '60.

Taylor, the direct opposite of Marcol, was the only Packer ever to reach 100 strictly on touchdowns, scoring 19 in 1962 for his 114 points.

Fritsch got his 100 the hard way, scoring 10 TDs, 13 PATs and nine field goals during what might be termed a poor Packer season, 6-5-0 for .545 in 1946. Hutson's '42 Packers posted 8-2-1 while the next year GB had 7-2-1. Hornung and Taylor did their high scoring during the winning 1960s and the 1972-Marcol team posted 10-4-0. It helps to win.

As in the past the following Packer records are presented with apologies to all those Packer greats who played before records were kept:

PERRY MOSS

BILLY KINARD

JOHNNY ROLAND

Quarterback coach

By MIKE KUPPER
The Milwaukee Journal

A quarterback coach, a new coach for the defensive backs, and a man of many duties—armed with a computer — will try to help the Packers get turned back toward consistent winning this year.

The quarterback coach is Perry Moss, formerly of the University of Wisconsin, formerly of the Packers themselves, and most recently of the Chicago Bears.

The new defensive backfield coach is Billy Kinard, also formerly of the Packers, and most recently of the University of Mississippi.

And Mr. Versatile is Johnny Roland, formerly of the St. Louis Cardinals, and most recently of the New York Giants. His computer has no previous experience.

If there is a key man among the three, it could well turn out to be Moss, for it will be his job — and a new job at that on the Packer staff — to straighten out the quarterback problems that so hampered the team in 1973.

And Moss, who was an assistant at Wisconsin under Milt Bruhn in 1957 and '58, a special assignment coach with the Packers in 1963 and a quarterback with the Packers in 1948, figures on getting the job done.

Otherwise, he says, he wouldn't have left the Bears, where he was about as secure as an assistant coach can be.

"I wasn't too anxious to leave Chicago, and if we'd had a team I thought was a contender, I wouldn't have thought too much about talking to other people. But I couldn't see the Bears as a strong contender, and I'm looking forward more to coaching here in Green Bay than I ever did in Chicago. We can have a winner here, and I'll have greater responsibilities here than in Chicago. I never did have the responsibility there that I thought I should have had, with my experience."

"We Can Have a Winner Here"
—Perry Moss

Moss' main duty will be to develop the Packers' young quarterbacks, along with the offense they will be expected to employ.

"The quarterbacks will have somebody to give them more attention," he said. "And there should be control in some offensive areas where it may have been lacking. We'll be able to have quarterback meetings where we'll have time to go into these things."

The offense will remain primarily what the offense has been, but Moss has some ideas. "Nothing really earthshaking, just a few new little wrinkles that might work," he said.

And one of those wrinkles could be increased use of the quarterback option, the bread and butter play of so many college teams.

"The reason nobody in the pros runs it is because they don't want to expose the quarterback to a lot of punishment. The defensive people are so much bigger in the NFL than they are in college. But we ran it in Chicago with Bobby Douglass, and I think with the quarterbacks we have here, we can handle it all right. Jerry Tagge used it at Nebraska and Scott Hunter played it at Alabama. I don't think Jim Del Gaizo played it in college, but that shouldn't be a problem."

Play calling is another area that Moss hopes to iron out. "Last year, as I understand it, it went both ways, with the coaches calling the plays sometimes, and the quarterbacks at others. I like to let the quarterback handle the game, let him set up the game plan, practice it and rehearse it the way he wants to do it, and call his own plays. Of course, we'll help with the game plan and, in critical situations, send in a play or two. They'll get help from the sidelines in any event, but basically the quarterbacks should run the game."

Kinard will be returning to pro football after a 13 year absence, during which time he was staying busy as a college coach. He spent his first two years in pro ball as a Green Bay defensive back in 1957-58.

His biggest concern, however, is not getting reacclimated to the pro game, but getting used to it under the new rule limiting the bump and run ploy to a single bump. And even that may not be too big a problem, he says.

"The first impression was to get excited about the changes, but in looking at these things again, you don't know if there'll be that much of a change for us.

"I'm basically concerned with the new rule on the bump and run because we've used it in the past with Ken Ellis and Willie Buchanon. They played a lot of man to man, and some of that was predicated on the bump and run.

"The first impression was that we might have to go more to a zone defense, but with the technique those two employed in the past, I don't know if the new rule will hurt us or change us much at all. With their technique, they haven't been putting their hands on the receivers more than once anyway.

"Computer New Area for Packers"
—Johnny Roland

"We have to keep an open mind and do the things our personnel will allow us to do. Every team has to be able to play both zone and man to man, but basically we're a man to man team."

Roland, who spent most of his career as a running back with the Cardinals, finished up last year with the Giants, where he also began breaking into the administrative end of the game.

And his variety of duties with the Packers amount to one thing in his mind—quality control. He'll coach a little, scout a lot—both on the pro and college levels — and spend lots of time with his trusty, he hopes, computer.

"The computer, using it the way we'll use it, is a new area for the Packers," he said. And it will be a new area for him, too.

"We'll be using it both offensively and defensively, feeding it information and trying to determine patterns and tendencies."

And the patterns he hopes to determine are the ones that the Packers develop, consciously or unconsciously, that will alert opponents; and those developed by opponents, which can alert the Packers.

"It may take a while for me to make the adjustment of not being a player, but this is interesting," Roland said. "It looks like a great way to do it."

the 49ers on national television. "We went all out in that San Francisco game — as much as we had in any game in 1972," he said, "and we didn't win, didn't even come close.

"Yet the difference in the game was just a few offensive and defensive plays, and we've got to change those around this year."

Elaborating on this point, he added, "We were not a particularly good third down team last year, either on offense or defense, and these are things we're also going to have to improve on substantially in 1974."

The anticipated improvement in artistry should be hastened and facilitated, Devine believes, by the arrival upon the Packer scene of three new assistant coaches— Perry Moss, Billy Kinard and John Roland. Moss is a numerical addition to the staff, filling the quarterback coach vacancy created when Bart Starr resigned following the 1972 season to enter private business.

"The demands in this business are such that all coaches feel the pinch of time, whether they are also general manager or not," Devine explained. "They feel the demands of the job pull them away from the technical aspects of the game more than they would like, so any additional coaching assistance we can get should help materially."

Still striving to reach the "Miami" plateau in a sweeping rebuilding project he launched upon assuming the Packer controls in January of 1971, he concedes the program has not been exclusively on an up-curve.

"We're a little bit like a graph," he said. "In 1971, we didn't play any better than the Packers did in '70, maybe not quite as well. In '72, we went up a big shot. Then in '73, we dropped again, although I don't think as far as we did in '71. To date, our three-year pattern looks a little like an investment graph.

"This is traceable in part, I'm sure, to the great number of retirements we have had — players we have lost without getting anything in return for them.

"And a number of them were not ordinary retirements. Willie Wood was one of the premier free safeties of all time. And Ray Nitschke was named the best middle linebacker of pro football's first 50 years.

"Bart Starr and Zeke Bratkowski probably were the best one-two quarterback punch in the history of the game. And Forrest Gregg is rated the greatest offensive tackle ever to play in the NFL. So you're not talking about just ordinary retirements."

Where in the light of these developments and three years of effort in the trade market and the draft, does he feel his club finds itself at this point in time?

"I think this team is at the stage where it still will have to fight, scratch and dig for every little bit of something we're going to get," Devine said, following a pause to ponder. "But the new rule changes may give us an opportunity to fight, scratch and dig just a little more.

"By that, I mean they give you some flexibility. If you work hard on your kicking game, you can make these changes work for you, instead of against you. What I want to do is win a couple of games with our kicking game.

"We probably won two games and influenced two more in 1972 by our kicking game, which played a big role in our drive to the division championship."

"I'm sure we have some limitations in certain areas due to inexperience, and maybe a few personnel deficiencies, but I'm also sure this team will fight, scratch and dig.

"We're all determined to make a run at it."

WILLIE BUCHANON

a good place to start

By GENE W. HINTZ
United Press International

Any talk about the Green Bay Packers defensive backfield usually begins with Willie Buchanon.

And, says secondary coach Bill Kinard, "That's a pretty good place to start."

Buchanon, the free-wheeling, free-living cornerback, has been a starter for the Packers since he signed his first contract two years ago.

Willie Buchanon is "Such An Optimistic Person"
—Billy Kinard

Only a broken leg suffered in the fifth game of the 1973 season took him out of the lineup and the effervescent Buchanon is certain it won't hurt him a bit this season.

"We're ever so hopeful he'll return to 1972 form," says Kinard. "And, so far, he's withstood all the tests they've given him."

The leg is "perfect" as far as

Buchanon is concerned and he's not too worried that he has lost mobility—a natural concern when thinking about that do-it-all position of cornerback.

"It isn't too much of a problem as far as my agility is concerned," he said. He said he started playing basketball after getting his cast removed and "I could feel my fundamental skills coming back."

Buchanon is a picture of sartorial splendor off the field and — those who have seen him — rate him just plain splendid on the field.

Head Defensive Coach Dave Hanner calls him the "premier cornerback in the NFL."

Off the field he's usually dressed in the latest fashion.

"I like to dress well at all times," he says. "Of course, I'm from California and everyone does that there. I've even got high heels on my tennis shoes."

"We've Got All the Tools — We've Just Got to Use Them At the Right Time and Pull Together"
—Willie Buchanon

There were other injuries on defense last year, but Buchanon's loss was probably the most noticeable—mainly because it took the only healthy, experienced player from the left side of the Packers' defense.

"Losing a player the caliber of Buchanon would have to not only hurt you in that position, but in other spots as well," said Kinard.

"The players left out there can't help but think about it . . . think, 'I've got to take charge now, help the new guy out.' "

Playing the strong side with Buchanon were Clarence Williams at end and Tom MacLeod, a rookie, at linebacker.

"Clarence played almost all season with a muscle pull in his arm," Kinard said. "It's on the side where he had to ward off the blocker. I don't see how he did it, really."

Kinard described Buchanon as "such an optimistic person."

"Anybody coming back after an injury like that needs the optimism," Kinard said.

Optimistic probably understates Buchanon's attitude in his third season with Green Bay.

"I broke my ankle before (in high school in 1964) and I came off it good," he says. "I think it may even have helped my speed.

"I'm really anxious to get back at it. I've been out of it for so long, watching other people playing the game and not being able to participate. It got me down.

"I think if we pull ourselves together and do the things we did in 1972 and improve, we'll be a contender for the Super Bowl.

"We've got all the tools — we've just got to use them at the right time and pull together."

Kinard rates togetherness as one of his favorite words.

That's why he's so pleased with his unit of Buchanon, Ken Ellis, Jim Hill and Al Matthews. In reserve he has such players as Perry Smith, Ike Thomas, Hise Austin and Charlie Hall.

"The biggest asset they have is that they have great rapport with one another," Kinard said.

"It's really essential. You've got to have a great amount of confidence, concentration, mental toughness, whatever you want to label it to play back there and they've got it."

"And they have to be around together long enough so you can install enough versatility. When you can do that, you can put in those things that keep the opponent off balance."

Kinard feels his backs may be close to that level of experience and togetherness.

Kinard compared Hill, at 28 the old man of the deep defenders, favorably with Willie Wood, the former Green Bay all-pro.

"I think he'll really tackle," Kinard said. "He's young and at his age he can only get better. He's got the ability and intelligence you need in football.

"You know you don't need that blazing speed to play his spot. Wood didn't have it. He wasn't that fast, but he was smart. Jim's got that concentration — just like Willie."

"Matthews," Kinard said, "is not as big as you'd like a strong safety to be. But he gets the job done and he really gets in some good licks. That's what counts."

As for Ellis, who has been twice selected as an all-pro, Kinard is convinced he has an outstanding future.

"He can do anything he wants to do as far as playing pass defense," Kinard said. "He's got a ton of ability and can really fly.

PERRY SMITH BREAKS UP PASS.

"Ken just needs a little bit of work on his tackling and that will come. Don't forget, he was a wide receiver in college and you don't tackle at that position."

Kinard said he feels the new rules for defensive backs should have a minimal effect on the Packers.

"When we first saw them, we said, 'Oh heck, that's going to affect us more than anybody. That's what Perry Smith and Willie Buchanon and Ken Ellis do so well."

But, he said, after studying them, the Packers now feel there will be little effect. The rules that affect the backs are those prohibiting cutting down a receiver at the line and modifying the bump and run.

"Only a couple of times last season did we try to cut down the receiver," Kinard said. "So I don't really feel that rule will affect our style of play too much.

"You've got to have guys big enough and strong enough to cut. Otherwise you just end up missing the guy."

The modified bump and run allows jostling of the receiver within a three-yard buffer zone along the line of scrimmage and one bump outside the zone.

"That's the technique we've been using and teaching anyway," Kinard said. So, hopefully, it won't affect us as much as we felt initially. Of course, that's going to be up to the judgment of the officials."

a first for O.J.

The Miami Dolphins and O. J. Simpson did it all in 1973 . . . Miami won a second straight Super Bowl and Simpson, toiling for the Buffalo Bills, reached an unreachable plateau in rushing, 2,000 yards.

Green Bay won't get a chance to test the Dolphins' muscles in 1974 (barring a playoff) but the Packers will work against The Juice . . . when the Bills visit Green Bay Oct. 6.

This will be the first league game between the Packers and Bills and the last of the "firsts" between the traditional Packers and the newcomer American Conference teams. Last year, the Packers met the New York Jets and New England Patriots for the first time and drew a split. Green Bay downed the Jets but lost to the Pats.

Simpson rushed for 2,003 yards last year, breaking the barrier with a 200-yard job against the Jets in the league final. O. J. broke the record of 1,863 yards set by Jim Brown of the Cleveland Browns in 1963.

While Simpson will be playing his first league game in Green Bay, it can be recalled that the great Brown made his last appearance in Lambeau Field in the NFL championship game between the Packers and Browns Jan. 2, 1966.

Brown wasn't exactly a ball of fire that day as the Packers ground out a 23-12 victory chiefly on the running of Paul Hornung and Jim Taylor on a slushy and slippery field.

Brown was limited to 50 yards in 12 carries and caught three passes for 44 yards. Hornung reeled off 105 yards in 18 carries and Taylor lugged 27 times for 96 yards.

While Simpson went wild, the past season was not a vintage one for the 1,000-yard gang. Ten players broke the four-figure barrier in 1972 but only five in 1973, topped by Simpson's total. Behind O. J. were the Pack's John Brockington with 1,144 yards, Calvin Hill of Dallas with 1,142, Larry McCutcheon of Los Angeles with 1,097 and Larry Csonka of Miami with 1,003.

There was only one other Packer in the "Top Ten" in the NFL. That would be Punter Ron Widby, who finished sixth, with his average of 43.1 yards on 56 punts.

The NFL established two statistical categories for scorers for the first time in 1973, thus separating touchdown makers and kickers.

Larry Brown of the Redskins won the "touchdown scoring" title with 14 TDs for 84 points. David Ray, the Rams' kicking star, posted 130 points to win in the foot derby. He had 40 extra points in 42 attempts and 30 field goals in 47 tries.

The Packers' Chester Marcol, who led the NFL with 128 points in '72, finished down the list in 1973 with 82 points on 19 extra points and 21 field goals in 35 attempts.

Packer-Bear game switch

The Packer-Bear game . . . where?

The great Packer-Bear rivalry, oldest and often the bitterest in the National Football League, is no longer a Green Bay fixture.

Milwaukee, the Packers' second home, now gets a piece of the action — at least in 1974.

The NFL's last two charter teams will collide in Milwaukee County Stadium Sunday, Nov. 10 —the ninth game on the '74 schedule. The first game in the annual home and home doubleheader will be played in Chicago Soldier Field Monday night, Oct. 21. That's a first, too.

Back in the terrible 1950s when the Packers had trouble drawing fans, not to mention winning, it was suggested that the Bear game be played at times in Milwaukee —in hopes of getting larger crowds. But shifting the Bear game to Beer Town was considered the next thing to heresy. The very thought was dropped.

The move last spring was greeted with newspaper advertisements in protest — plus a petition of protest, containing thousands of signatures, at the annual Packer stockholders' meeting in May.

Packer President Dominic Olejniczak explained to stockholders that the major reason for the switch was a difficult scheduling problem. Playing the Bear game in Green Bay could easily have created a situation where one Green Bay game would be played in early September and the other three in November.

The league makes up the schedule (opponents and sequence of games) and the Packers, in turn, decide which city to play them in.

During the past few years, an effort was made to play all three Central Division teams in Green Bay, thus offering little variety of opposition.

This year, however, only one Central club — the Vikings, will play in Green Bay. They meet in the league opener Sept. 15. The other three foes are real newcomers — Buffalo Oct. 6, Washington Nov. 3 and San Diego Nov. 24. The AFC Bills and Chargers never played in Green Bay in a league game and Washington last appeared in Packertown in 1959. That, incidentally, was the only time the Redskins ever played a league game in Green Bay. Six other Redskin league games were played in Milwaukee.

The Milwaukee schedule has Detroit Sept. 29, Los Angeles Oct. 13 and Chicago Nov. 10.

The Bears won't be complete strangers in Green Bay. They'll be in Lambeau Field for an exhibition Saturday, Aug. 17 and Denver's Broncos move in the following Saturday night for another preseasoner. The pre-season games in Milwaukee are St. Louis Saturday, Aug. 10 and Cincinnati Friday, Sept. 6.

The Packer-Bear rivalry goes all the way back to 1921 and through 1973 these two battlers were involved in 110 league games.

This rivalry actually was fostered by the founders of the two teams, Curly Lambeau and George Halas.

They became enemies in a hurry and rarely even spoke to each other except for official business at league meetings. They didn't trust each other and a trade between the Bears and Packers in their day was unheard of.

But Lambeau and Halas had one thing in common: Respect for each other. The two mellowed in later years and Halas, still active in Bear affairs, was even honored at a banquet in Green Bay. He served as a pallbearer for Lambeau when he died in 1965.

THE BIG "G" AND THE BIG "C"

For many years the Bears and Packers were the one-two teams in pro football and during the first three decades the Packers were never quite able to build up an advantage in the won-lost column. To this date, the Bears hold the edge in the series—56 wins against 48 losses. Six games ended in ties.

Lambeau posted a 22-35-5 record against the Bears. His successor, Gene Ronzani, had 2-5-1 and Liz Blackbourn followed with 2-6 and Scooter McLean 0-2.

Actually, of the next three coaches, Dan Devine has the best record against Chicago, winning five of six in his three seasons. Vince Lombardi was 13-5 and Phil Bengtson 4-2.

Here's how the series went by decades:

1920s—Packers won 7, lost 7, 3 tied.

1930s—Packers won 11, lost 12, 1 tied.

1940s—Packers won 4, lost 16, 1 tied.

1950s — Packers won 5, lost 14, 1 tied.

1960s — Packers won 15, lost 5.

1970s — Packers won 6, lost 2.

Back in the 1940s and 1950s, it was customary for the Bears and Packers to open the season against each other—mostly in Green Bay.

Taking note of the Packers' problems with winning in the 1950s, the late NFL Commissioner Bert Bell once said: "Those darned Packers. They hate the Bears so much that if they lost that first game their whole season is shot."

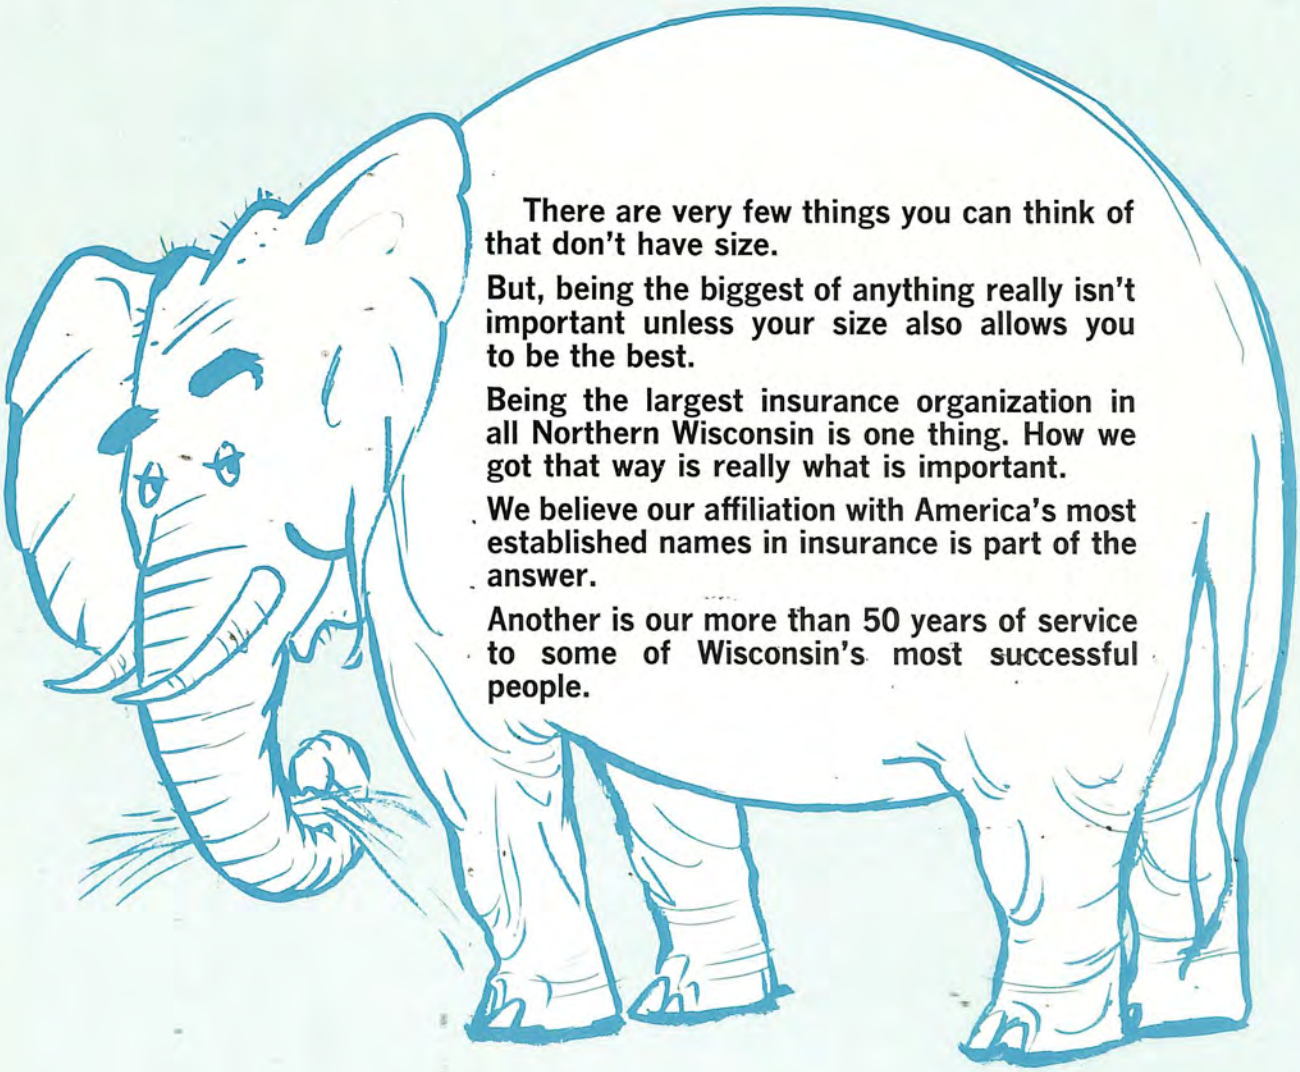
Smaller than an elephant, Bigger than a bread box?



There are very few things you can think of that don't have size.

But, being the biggest of anything really isn't important unless your size also allows you to be the best.

Being the largest insurance organization in all Northern Wisconsin is one thing. How we got that way is really what is important.

We believe our affiliation with America's most established names in insurance is part of the answer.

Another is our more than 50 years of service to some of Wisconsin's most successful people.

Arctic's come a long way since its birth back in 1962. That was the year we introduced the first rear-engined, steel-hooded "Tin Lizzie."

Back then, the top of the line was called the Model 500. It sported an automotive-type steering wheel—forward and reverse gears—and if you could look past the roller chain track (which, rumor has it, was borrowed from a hay baler) you found a solid-maple skid frame.

You bet, by today's standards it was plenty primitive. But even the old Model 500 was born with a slide rail—and that said Arctic wasn't going to be satisfied with playing follow the leader.

During the next three years, design innovation became second nature with Arctic engineers. They moved the engine up front—and tucked it under a fiberglass hood. They devised a rubber track with steel cleats. And introduced a 2 cycle engine.

Then, in 1966, the Cat really came of age.

It was the year of the first Panther—and with it, the first riveted, aluminum chassis. The first low, forward mounted engine. The first canted skis. The first leaf-spring front suspension. The first torsion spring slide rail suspension.

It was the year of the first totally integrated snowmobiling system—and it clearly established Arctic's engineering dominance.

Since '66, Cats have just kept getting better and better. We've improved our improvements, then improved 'em some more.

Like now, in '75. This is the year of The Gripper, the Cat's new track. It combines the best of both rubber and steel. Rubber pads to reach out and grip ice or hardpack. And steel cleats for maximum thrust in deep powder.

Yep, there's been a whole lot of changes since that first Model 500. But listen, one thing's always stayed the same. One sled's always led the way. And year after year it's the Cat.

Year after year it's the Cat
